CHRISTIANS ASK QUESTIONS

The other evening I addressed quite a gathering of young Christians and women at Summerside Church, Lachine, Que. I set some of the questions asked me during the open forum which followed. These congregations indicate that, generally speaking, Christians have a meagre knowledge of Jews and Judaism. What a pity that our Jews do not make serious and organized effort to promote knowledge of Judaism among their non-Jewish neighbours!

1. Please define Jew and Hebrew.
2. Would a Jew employ a Christian in a place of business?
3. Do you think the Jewish People will ever adopt Christianity?
4. Why will employees not employ Jews?
5. Granting that Christianity is an organization, and it does [illegible] toward the Jews, would the Jews themselves ever [illegible] to join the ranks of Christianity?
6. How does the Jew to-day regard the person who [illegible]
7. Is not Judaism equally divided as Christianity?
8. Do the Jews as a People wish to consolidate Christians to [illegible] into the fold of Jews?
9. Are certain business enterprises opened at the present [illegible] result of such opposition on the part of Christians?
10. What suggestions could you offer as to why promote better understanding between Jews and Christians?
11. Do Jews accept the teachings of Christ in matters of ethical conduct?
12. Have the Jews given up the idea of the coming of a Messiah?

[illegible]

Some there are who regard life as a divine gift, others look upon it as an hereditary curse. But whatever view we may regard it, there are certain claims that must be met, which Thomas Aquinas and Herbert Spencer.

Perhaps the greatest of these is the ability to laugh. For laughter distinguishes man as lighter [illegible] which, in the present, [illegible] angers, laughter is a great boon and man is the laughing animal par excellence. Laughter's function is to serve the human and the social in checking [illegible] asocial tendencies. It comes as [illegible] becoming vices of [illegible]. A truly normal person laughs [illegible] at [illegible] thinks and [illegible].

Further the ages man has invented [illegible] kinds of laughter.

1. There is the primal laugh. It is the subtlest and most evasive [illegible] and is to be found among those who sneer at the conventionalities of [illegible]. This primal laughter is usually characteristic of semi-moronic [illegible].

2. There is another kind of laughter. It is the laughter with [illegible] or malice in it. Some such wrong others suffer, has many here [illegible] as [illegible] and [illegible] to [illegible] and [illegible] to [illegible] and [illegible] to

TRAYMORE CAFETERIA

And what a delectable treat is in store for everybody who comes to Traymore's. It seems impossible to prepare the palatable meal for the price we ask—we assure you that you'll like it. With assurance of highest quality and consistently low prices there's that third fact—courteous service which makes this the restaurant of your choice.

JEWRY TO WELCOME HEAD OF HEBREW UNIVERSITY OF JERUSALEM

When Dr. Judah L. Magnes left this country 11 years ago for Palestine, there were some who said: "There goes a man whose brilliant future lies behind him."

It didn't sound paradoxical then. Magnes had been rabbi of the largest and most influential Jewish congregation in America. He had won world-wide attention as a liberal and a champion of human rights. He had proven himself the unquestioned leader of Jewish nationalism.

All this he left behind to accept the chancellorship of a then non-existent university in barren Palestine. And there were many enemies who hoped that he would find there, if not actual failure, at least a harmless obscurity.

The last laugh belongs to Dr. Magnes. He is on his way back to America, more powerful, his friends say, than when he left. He will be received enthusiastically at the very synagogue from which, because of his strict tenets of Judaism, he once was virtually ousted. There is to be a country-wide celebration of the sixth anniversary of the Hebrew University in Palestine, which he has organized as a prime factor in the progress of Zionism.

His school is the only one of university rank in the Near East. About 50 scientists and scholars comprise its staff. The first chairman of its academic council was Albert Einstein, and one of those whose job it is to uphold scientific standards is Dr. Sigmund Freud.

First a graduate research institution, the university now offers courses for undergraduates. Its institutes of chemistry, natural history, mathematics, physics and microbiology are devoting themselves to problems which confront all Palestine. It already has gone far toward stamping out the diseases of desert and swamp. It is bringing modern agriculture, irrigation, electric power and reclamation to the once poor, neglected land.

There was no such thing as a Zionist crusade when Judah Magnes, originally of Oakland, Cal., entered the Hebrew Union College in Cincinnati at the age of 21. He wanted only to become a rabbi, and received that degree in 1900. An athlete, tall, handsome and friendly, he also had distinguished himself as an orator and scholar. There was many a pulpit waiting for him then, but he chose instead to take a degree of Doctor of Philosophy at Heidelberg.

It was in Europe that his destiny was molded. There he came in contact with two distinct groups of Jewry — one frankly in favor of racial assimilation, the other militantly national. Magnes found himself believing that only by living his own cultural and religious life could the Jew hope to aid himself and world civilization. He was a Zionist without knowing it. As yet he was not concerned with the establishment of a legally guaranteed Jewish homeland in Palestine.

In America, he taught for a year at a rabbinical school, but found he had entirely too many original ideas for conservative instruction. Then he became the rabbi of a fashionable New York temple, where he preached national Judaism to a congregation that didn't know what he was talking about, and wouldn't have taken him seriously if it had.

But the members did notice with resentment, that the empty pews were being filled by Jews from the ghetto, folk of East European origin who were far below the social standards of their set. They were there to listen to the new leader of Zionism. Then, adding to the unrest of his fashionable followers, Dr. Magnes became a fighter as well as a theorist. He organized and led a parade through New York as a demonstration against the slaughter of Jews in Russia. He raised large sums to provide the Russian Jewish defence organizations with arms and ammunition. In scores of meetings he brought the cause of Israel before the American public.

Criticized by members of his temple, Magnes tried to resign. Instead, he was offered, and finally accepted, the pulpit of Emanu-El, with the largest, wealthiest congregation in America. But he surrendered none of his interest in the Jewish masses, on whom he knew the dream of a new Zion depended. Palestine never would be repeopled by millionaires.

A clash with the trustees of the temple finally brought his resignation, and Dr. Magnes soon declared himself through with preaching. The next few years he quietly devoted to organization and education among the Jews of New York. With the World War, he bounced again into the national spotlight, this time as a pacifist. Government agents followed him everywhere, and his arrest often was reported. Patriotic societies denounced him as "pro-German" and "Bolshevist." His own people fumed that he was casting doubt upon the loyalty of all Jews.

But the war that he opposed gave Palestine back to Israel, and Magnes was not slow to take advantage of it. He went abroad. It was significant that "a people without a land and a land without a people" for nearly 2,000 years should have conceived the idea of a university as one of the first steps of Palestine's rehabilitation.

Dr. Magnes directed the organization and became the chancellor when it was dedicated by Lord Balfour in 1925. There are no limitations of sex or creed, and there are Arab students as well as Jews. The ill-feeling between these traditional enemies is declared to be lessening under Magnes' influence. More than a year ago he came in for widespread criticism because he advised making peace with the Arabs instead of depending on British force or interference by any Government. But subsequent events have borne out his views.

While in America, for a stay of at least three months, Dr. Magnes plans to visit the chief colleges and universities to study their organization, particularly in the departments of sciences and Oriental studies.

Dr. Judah L. Magnes, Chancellor of the Hebrew University, in Jerusalem, Palestine, will be the guest of honor at a dinner to be held March 17th, at the Savoy Plaza Hotel, under the auspices of the American Advisory Committee, of which Felix M. Warburg is Chairman. Chancellor Elmer Ellsworth Brown of New York University will preside.

In accepting the invitation tendered him by Mr. Warburg, Chancellor Brown said, "I should suppose that this would be an occasion of much interest for all of our institutions of higher education in this city and I hope they may be liberally represented in the attendance."

Dr. Magnes will arrive in this country March 12th, for a three months' tour on behalf of the Hebrew University, of which he has been the head since its dedication by the Earl of Balfour in 1925. During Dr. Magnes' visit a country-wide celebration of the Sixth Anniversary of the University will be held in April.

A University Committee, composed of Presidents of academic institutions and Heads of Semitic Departments has been formed to welcome Dr. Magnes. In addition to Chancellor Brown, Dr. Nicholas Murray Butler, President of Columbia University and President Frederick B. Robinson of the College of the City of New York, will represent the local institutions. Other members of the American University Committee which will welcome Dr. Magnes, include President Robert B. Hutchins, of the University of Chicago, Dr. Joseph S. Ames of Johns Hopkins University, Provost Josiah Penniman of the University of Pennsylvania, President David A. Robertson of Goucher College. Included on the Committee are such well known Orientalists as Professor James H. Breasted, of the University of Chicago, Professor William Foxwell Albright, of Johns Hopkins University, formerly Director of the American School of Archaeology in Jerusalem: Professor H. Montgomery of the University of Pennsylvania, and Professor Charles C. Torrey, Head of the Semitics Department at Yale University.

Among the members of the American Advisory Committee who will act as hosts to Dr. Magnes are Judge Benjamin N. Cardozo, Judge Julian W. Mack, Dr. Cyrus Adler, Judge Irving Lehman, and Dr. Stephen S. Wise.

Dr. Magnes, who was formerly Rabbi of the Temple Emanu-El, of New York, last visited this country in 1927 on behalf of the University. While in the United States Dr. Magnes will address meetings at various Universities and confer with members of the Departments of Oriental Studies and Scientific departments regarding proposed additions to the present faculties of the Hebrew University.

In a discussion on the mentality of millionaires held by Professor Walter B. Pitkin, psychologist of Columbia University, and Julius Rosenwald, chairman of the board of Sears, Roebuck, and Company, the former defined achievement as "distinguished successful endeavour usually in the face of difficulties." Then he listed as four qualifications for the highest degree of achievement: a clear, well-conceived ambition; persistent struggle to surmount vast obstacles; thorough accomplishment of the objective set; great significance and human value of the success achieved. Professor Pitkin named Thomas E. Edison as the only living business man who satisfied these qualifications. The only Jews named at all were David Sarnoff, of the Radio Corporation, and Julius Rosenwald and they were both placed in the class which satisfied two of the four qualifications.

Mr. Rosenwald, admitting freely that there was much luck in the process which changed the $35,000 he invested in Sears, Rosebuck into many millions, said: "I mean that seriously. I never could understand the popular belief that, because a man makes a lot of money, he has a lot of brains. Some very rich men who have made their own fortunes have been among the stupidest men I have ever met in my life. There are men in America today, walking the streets, financial failures, who have more brains and more ability than I will ever have. I had the luck to get my opportunity. Their opportunity never came. As newspaper sports writers say, 'They never got the breaks.' Rich men are not smart because they got rich. They didn't get rich because they are smart. Remember always that many poor men are smarter than the richest men in the world. Don't ever confuse wealth with brains. They are synonymous sometimes, but none too often."

This is not the first time that Mr. Rosenwald has publicly appraised the mind of the merely rich with harshness. His constant refusal to take entire credit for his great wealth sets him apart from most rich men. Evidently he has retained his perspective and kept his head in the midst of much adulation which must have appeared to him as silly. The Jewish people do their best to spoil their rich men by dashing after them with flattery and in servility. The popular assumption that money means brains probably has its foundation in that innate love of possession which leads people to value men not for what they are in quality but for what they have accumulated in goods.

Elma Ehrlich Levinger has been awarded the $2,000 prize offered by the Jewish Tribune Publications and the Stratford Company for the best novel of Jewish interest. Her story, "Grapes of Canaan", took the prize over others submitted by well-known authors. Among the judges were Lewis Browne, the writer, and Dr. Abba Hillel Silver, rabbi of the Cleveland Temple. The winning story will be published serially in the American Jewish Tribune and after that in book form by the Stratford Company.

Before her marriage Mrs. Levinger studied play writing, attended the University of Chicago and Radcliffe College, taught school, coached amateur plays, and edited a Jewish children's magazine. Since her marriage she has written short stories which were syndicated in Jewish papers and also many volumes of juvenile books and short plays. Her early stories, although full of human interest, were as the saying goes, not so hot. But the children's books, evidently written to supply a need of her own little ones, are of value to other Jewish children lucky enough to have them. Several of her plays have received contest prizes and are included in books of plays. Her articles are direct, readable, and fresh with ideas that provoke thought.

As the busy wife of a busy rabbi and the mother of three young children, Mrs. Levinger might have looked backward upon one career instead of forward to another one besides that which marriage brought her. Many a Jewish woman has lounged comfortably for the rest of her life on far fewer laurels. After marriage even the most alert and promising girls have been known to sink into a state where the only stimulants are petty gossip, window-shopping and other trivial time-killers. They achieve nothing in self-development outside the home and idleness breeds a discontent with whatever could be achieved within it. In the end they hold a grievance against the world because life is so dull and they are so hemmed in.

In the case of Mrs. Levinger it is easy to imagine that her days are crowded with activity, interests and the art of living. She is not a genius so her success must have been won by ceaseless plotting, hard work and singleness of purpose. Marriage, motherhood, and social position were unable to combine as a hindrance to entangle her. On the contrary, she has grown so much and her work has improved so steadily that her immediate profession of home-maker must have been the direct inspiration for continued happiness in achievement and self-expression.

HIAS CONFRONTED WITH SERIOUS FINANCIAL CONDITION

Fifty years of Jewish Immigration into the United States, their significance and implication both to Jewry and to America, was the keynote of the Twenty-Second Annual Meeting of the Hebrew Sheltering and Immigrant Aid Society of America (Hias), held Sunday afternoon, March 1st, at the Hotel Astor, nearly 2,000 men and women attended. Speakers were Sir Wilmot Lewis, Washington correspondent of The London Times; Congressman F. H. La Guardia, M. Stoyan Omarchevsky, former Bulgarian Minister of Education, now on a visit in this country; Aaron Benjamin, who for the past two years Hias Commissioner in Europe; Rev. H. Masliansky and B. C. Vladeck. Abraham Herman, the President, who was in the chair, presented his annual message. Mr. Herman dealt with the proposed legislation relating to immigration, pointing out that the new bill will militate against the wives and children of non-citizens. He said that all children of American citizens including those over 18 should be admitted. There should also be given legalization to persons entering the United States prior to July 1, 1924 and in whose cases there are no records of arrivals. These should be given the same standing as those who came here prior to June 3, 1921 since they are not subject to deportation under the immigration laws. Renewed proposal for the registration of aliens was tantamount to espionage for which there was no justification, Mr. Herman said. "We are not raising the cry of anti-Semitism, of anti-Jewishness. It affects all immigrants, all the foreign-born. The situation today is the outgrowth of skilful and widespread propaganda against the foreign-born over a long period of years. There is a recrudescence of anti-Semitism in its most violent form. The necessity for constructive work such as has been done by Hias is growing more and more urgent every day." Dealing with the financial condition of Hias, Mr. Herman pointed out that conditions had been so bad during the year that steps had to be taken to curtail its work. Unless Hias has the means wherewith to finance it will have no other alternative than to give up the work. There have emigrated last year from Europe some 34,803 Jews who had settled in the United States, in Argentine, Brazil, Uruguay, Canada, France, Cuba, Mexico, Chili and other countries. To this country had come 12,563 Jews. In the various Hias-Ica-Emigdirect offices in Poland, Roumania, Lithuania and Latvia, 101,267 applicants came for advice. Through the efforts of the Society, $68,265 had been saved to emigrants in their travelling expenses."

The deficit for the current year, amounts to $16,539.91, which together with the deficit of previous years aggravated the financial burden from which the Society suffered.

The report of the general manager, Isaac L. Asofsky, told of the work to open and develop new Jewish Immigration centers begun on April 1st, 1927, and inaugurated by Hias in conjunction with the Jewish Colonization Association (Ica) and the United Jewish Emigration Committee of Europe (Emigdirect). During these three years the total Jewish emigration from Eastern Europe was 119,871. Of these 38,845 came to the United States and 33,826 went to South and Central American countries, Canada, South Africa, Australia, Palestine and various other lands. Argentine absorbed 18,382 Jewish immigrants, Brazil 14,822 and Uruguay 4,900. That these Jewish settlers were doing well in the new countries may be gathered from the fact that $304,277.00 were sent through the offices in Argentine by 18,714 remitters to their relatives in Europe. $218,277 was saved to emigrants in their traveling expenses. The total cost of these operations in foreign countries during the three years under review had been $476,034.96. Of this sum $162,304.82 had been spent in subsidies to committees, bureaus and offices in emigration countries and $185,044.32 in subsidies to committees, bureaus and offices in immigration countries. The huge sum of $1,271,014.87 was spent in these three years in the United States and foreign countries for emigrant and immigrant aid work.

As for the work in foreign countries during 1930 the report showed that 21,738 Jews had emigrated from Poland, 3,269 from Roumania, 3,922 from Lithuania and 874 from Latvia making a total of 34,803. For the same period 6,584 Jews had entered Argentine, 2,813 Brazil, 1,049 Uruguay, 3,475 Canada and 5,000 France.

Of the Hias work in the United States, the report showed that 12,563 Jews had arrived. Of these 8,974 were immigrants and 3,589 non-immigrants. 951 steamers had been met and 4,630 immigrants were discharged in the custody of Hias representatives. 30,537 kosher meals were served to immigrants and deportees at Ellis Island, the office of which also attended to 8,313 inquiries. The Washington Bureau made 312 appeals on behalf of Jewish Immigrants and of these only 44 were denied. The Department of Shelter served 79,982 meals and 12,812 nights of shelter were given. 7,731 applicants for citizenship were aided in the Citizenship Bureau. 34,725 remittances to relatives in foreign countries and totalling $1,164,831.36 were made through the Hias Remittance Bureau. From the inception of this department in April, 1920, $31,697,208.00 have been sent. 139,544 persons received advice and information and 40,138 cables, telegrams and letters coming from all parts of the world were received and answered. The affidavit Division prepared 16,262 documents.

The following were re-elected directors of the Society for a period of three years: Morris Asofsky, Joseph Baskin, Aaron Benjamin, Joseph E. Eron, Morris Feinstone, Harry Fischel, Abraham Herman, Alexander Kahn, Nathan Zvirin. And the following are the new directors on the Board to fill vacancies: Dr. A. Corsinik, Henry J. Hyman, Hyman Meyerson, Hon. Adolph Stern.

GRANT FLEMING, M.D. — ASSOCIATE SECRETARY

CANCER

The cure of cancer is possible in many cases when the disease is recognized early and proper treatment secured without any delay.

In its early stages, cancer is a local condition and, if it is completely removed or destroyed while it is still a local condition, a cure is effected and the cancer does not recur. If an early diagnosis is not made, then the cancer spreads to other parts, and after it has begun to spread, it is increasingly difficult to deal with successfully.

The most practical way to have cancer or other diseases discovered early is for each person to go to his family doctor, once a year, for a health examination. Such an examination affords the opportunity for the discovery of disease in its early stages, and so treatment may be started at the time when it offers the best chance of cure. This is one of the reasons why we advise every person to have a health examination once a year by his family physician.

There are conditions which, if they occur, should be considered as danger signals. They do not necessarily mean cancer, but they are sufficiently suspicious to send the persons in whom they occur to their doctor without delay. The doctor will be able, because of the knowledge and skill which he possesses, to decide whether or not cancer is present.

We do not wish to alarm people, but it is necessary that everyone be informed with regard to these suspicious conditions in order that when they are found to be due to cancer, early treatment may be secured and lives saved through prompt action.

Any lump, particularly on the breast, should be investigated. Any abnormal discharge or bleeding from the body should be regarded with suspicion and the cause ascertained. This is of particular importance in women at the time of the monopause.

Warts or moles are harmless, but if there is a change in their size or appearance, then such growths should be dealt with promptly, as sometimes they become cancerous.

A sore which does not heal rapidly, particularly if on the lip, is to be regarded with suspicion.

Chronic indigestion after middle life should not be neglected.

Pain does not usually occur in the early stages. It is therefore a serious mistake to think that a condition is of no importance because no pain is felt.

Proper treatment is available if you will go to your doctor, but your doctor cannot treat you and help you unless you go to him. There is every chance for cure if treatment is secured in the early stages, and whether it is secured or not depends upon each one's going to his doctor in time while the cancer is still curable.

NORTHERN ONTARIO
CANADA

Northern Ontario, now open for settlement at fifty cents per acre, contains millions of acres of the finest agricultural land in the world. Its resources in lumber, minerals, water, power, fish, game and scenery are immense. The land calls for men to cultivate it, and in return will give health, comfort and prosperity.

What settlers say of the soil, climate, farming, and forest life, is told in a most attractive booklet issued under the direction of the Honourable Thomas L. Kennedy, Minister of Agriculture for Ontario. Full instructions in regards to acquiring a title to these rich agricultural lands are also given.

For free copies write: G. A. ELLIOTT, Director of Colonization, Parliament Buildings, Toronto, Ontario. "Please mention this paper."

for the housewives of Toronto when this laundry was planned, built and equipped for the sole purpose of doing family wash. Since that day more and more homes are sending their family bundles regularly each week. These bundles may include anything washable, such as body clothes, flatware, curtains, rag rugs, dusters, men's shirts, etc. According to your particular needs you may select any one of our six services. Each takes the wash one step nearer completion. The charges are graded as to the amount of work done and are lower than it costs to have the same work done at home. Marriages

Snider-Haladner

With Rabbi S. Sachs officiating, the marriage of Bessie, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. D. Haladner, and Samuel, son of Mr. and Mrs. M. Snider, took place Tuesday, February 24th, at Old Spain. The bride, who was given in marriage by her father, wore a gown of eggshell satin, the bodice of which was finished round the neck with seed pearls, a bow and long, tight fitting sleeves. The circular skirt formed a train over which fell her net veil caught to the head with a cap of net and a band of seed pearls with clusters of shell blossoms over each ear and around the back of the cap. She carried a shower bouquet of orchids and lily of the valley. Miss Lee Sossin as maid of honor, wore pale green lace, with long green lace mitts. She carried a shower bouquet of pale pink roses. Both sisters of the bride, Miss Sadye Haladner, in turquoise blue crepe with pink shoes and gloves, carrying a sheath of pale pink roses; and Miss Eve Haladner in pale green moire, carrying a sheath of Talisman roses, with Miss Gertrude Cohen, cousin of the bride, in pale green chiffon, carrying a sheath of yellow roses, were bridesmaids. Helen Heitzman, niece of the bride, was the flower girl in pale pink crepe. Arthur Snider was his brother's best man. Stanley Katzman, Irwin Haladner, and Morris Fogle were groomsmen. Dinner was served to eighty-five guests, followed by a reception. The bride and groom left on a motor trip to Detroit and Cleveland, the bride travelling in a terra cotta chinese cloth with black galyak ensemble, matching hat, black shoes and bag and a corsage of orchids and lily of the valley.

Pearlman-Bergman

The marriage of Ida, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. N. Bergman, to Ben, son of Mr. and Mrs. S. Pearlman, was solemnized Sunday, March 1st., Rabbi Grashen and Cantor B. Wladowsky and choir officiating. The bride, who was given away by her mother and sister-in-law, Mrs. J. Weitzman, of Buffalo, N.Y., wore a white satin robe de style. Her veil of tulle was trimmed with Chantilly lace, with which she wore a rhinestone cap and orange blossoms. Her bouquet was of Butterfly roses and lily-of-the-valley. Mrs. Bergman was gowned in black lace and chiffon with corsage of American Beauty roses. Mrs. Pearlman wore black lace and similar corsage. Miss Annie Pearlman, as maid of honor, was in a pink satin gown carrying Butterfly roses. Miss Hilda Pearlman, in peach satin with bouquet of American Beauty roses. Miss Edith Bates of Windsor, Ont., in peach satin with similar bouquet, and Dorothy Cohen in peach satin and chiffon and with her bouquet were the bridesmaids. Louis Aronson was best man and the groomsmen were Max Pearlman, Hilton Meir and Sam Trosten. The flower girls were Shirley Bergman and Nick Weitzman, of Buffalo, N.Y. Both children were dressed in pink and carried baskets of carnations and roses. A reception was held at the Spain for 200 guests. Mr. and Mrs. B. Pearlman left on a honeymoon trip to Buffalo, Cleveland and Detroit. Out-of-town guests were Mr. and Mrs. J. Weitzman and sons, Mr. and Mrs. Louis and Miss Edith Bates of Windsor, Mr. and Mrs. David Weitzman and daughter, Mrs. of Buffalo, N.Y., Mr. and Mrs. Louis Bergman and daughters, Sara and Edith, and Miss Rachel of East Northport, Long Island, N.Y.

Grosbein-Soiway

The marriage of Sarah, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. A. D. Soiway, to Joseph, son of Mr. and Mrs. N. Grosbein, took place Tuesday, February 10th, at the King Edward Hotel, Alexandra Room. A carpeted aisle was formed to the chupah, which was surrounded with spring flowers. Rabbi J. Gordon officiated, assisted by his son, Daniel Gordon. The bride, who was given in marriage by her father, wore a crepe romaine gown cut on Grecian lines. Her long silk net veil was held in place by a pearl bandeau. Her wedding bouquet consisted of roses, lily of the valley, and orchids. Mrs. Louis Kazdan, sister of the bride, was matron of honor, and wore a metallic crepe gown in powder blue, carrying a shower bouquet of Ophelia roses. The bridesmaids were: Misses Lyl Celfetz, who wore a powder blue dress, with shoes to match, and carried Talisman roses; Lena Sossin, apple green lace gown with shoes to match, and Talisman roses; Pearl Krashow, eggshell satin and tulle gown, with red shoes, and red roses. Nasha Markman, was dressed in a pink French dress with a bonnet to match, and carried a basket of sweet peas. Shia Sossin, nephew of the bride, was page boy, and was dressed in a full dress suit, with high silk hat. Ben Grosbein, brother of the groom, was best man. The groomsmen were Ben Kaskey, Harry Weber, and Herman Klebanoff. The bride's mother wore a black chiffon and lace gown with a shoulder corsage of roses and sweet peas. The groom's mother was gowned in a chiffon velvet gown, and also wore a shoulder corsage of roses and sweet peas. Both mothers walked up the aisle together. Dinner was served at group tables of ten, to 300 guests. Entertainment and music for dancing was provided during the dinner. About 400 guests attended the reception.

Brash-Luxenberg

The marriage of Molly, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. M. A. Luxenberg, to Jack, son of Mrs. S. Brash and the late Mr. Brash, of London, England, took place, February 10th., at Old Spain, Rabbi Berger officiating. The bride, who was given away by her father, wore a gown of ivory satin cut on Grecian lines. Her veil of net and Spanish lace was draped in cap fashion and caught with orange blossoms. She carried a bouquet of Calla lilies and orchids. Bob Berman was best man. Mrs. Luxenberg, mother of the bride, wore black lace trimmed with rhinestones with corsage of American beauty roses. Mrs. J. B. Berman, sister of the bride, wore a flowered taffeta gown, colonial style, and a corsage of American beauty roses. Dinner was served to 200 guests. Mr. and Mrs. Brash left to spend their honeymoon in New York, Atlantic City, and Cleveland.

The Enemy's Gates

Ann, as she lay waiting for him to come to bed, suddenly felt herself trembling; her brain had flashed a neat telegraphic order, had told her the time for their talk was near. The months of preparation had come to an end. Terming the inevitable crisis a "talk," she had yet never discounted its importance; the sociable little word had taken on a tremendous significance in her thoughts.

Hearing the door from the sitting-room open, seeing his figure outlined on the threshold against the fanning glow of the fire, she nodded her head bravely. She had decided to make her stand to-night, because there had been in his eyes these last two days, a look of readiness, of begging appeal. Discipline couldn't be more wisely timed than at this moment of his docility. His few fits of irritation about his Wall Street affairs did not trouble her; they had been merely a sort of play-acting, with none of the force of his deeper-seated angers.

Elaborately cautious, George tip-toed across the room and went into the bath to undress. Ann, though suspense was throttling her, smiled into the darkness. He was so obviously enjoying his rôle of the overworked bread-winner, toiling through the night while his wife slumbered!

Climbing into bed at last, he had kissed her. She had been so quiet he had believed her asleep. Since there was little danger of being found out, he had put something of humble penitence into his stealthy salute; provided she was unconscious, he could ask her forgiveness for all his unkind thoughts and acts in the past. For a time, he fussed with the covers and shivered and muttered a few meaningless "damns." He had the starved chill of the early morning hours in his bone. She remained motionless till his body, pressed against her, had grown warm, till his roughened pores had shrunk and his flesh was smooth again. As soon as he was physically snug and content, she stirred.

"What time is it, George?"

"Past three," he answered proudly, rubbing his rough chin against her shoulder.

"I want you to promise me something, George." There was the slightest quaver in her voice. "I want you to promise to tell me all your worries. Will you do it?" She had begun to stroke his hair tenderly.

"Yes—I'll do it," he agreed. After a reflective silence, "You mean—about my work?" he asked, pressing for particulars.

"About everything," she returned. "I hate to think you'd keep back a single problem. That's why I married you—to share your troubles."

"What about my good times—didn't you think I'd have a few of them you could share?" he challenged gently.

"Why yes." She was matter-of-fact. "There's never any question of people sharing them."

"Well, what kind of worries do you want me to tell you about?" He came back politely to her question.

"Oh, the queer ones," she told him. "When people have hurt your feelings, you know, and don't realize it. They're the worst, when you keep them to yourself. They're the ones I could help you out of."

"I doubt it," he mused with some sadness.

"Give me the chance, anyhow," she said. "Maybe you're wrong. Tell me when I've been spiteful or Morton has or some man downtown."

She paused, her pulses stilled, her brain uncannily alert in a body that seemed to faint for one instant. Then, as her blood took up its pumping, she had begun her courageous advance upon the innermost guarded keep of his spirit. "I want you to do it," she had announced in apparent calmness, "because I'm going to do the very same thing with you, George. Whenever anyone's been mean to me, I'll come to you when you're unreasonable or cross, for instance, you'll hear about it from me right off. You do snub me sometimes, you know, without realizing it. The sensible thing's to have it all out. Don't you honestly think so?"

The friction of his chin against her shoulder had stopped.

"What have I done this time? What have you got against me now, Ann?" Her fingers slipped out of his hair as he threw up his head. Propped on one elbow, he was peering down into the featureless drowned whiteness of her face under the shadows. Listening to her with a racked intensity, he had soon leaped ahead of her pity and, before she had uttered her careful remonstrance, had read censure into every word she spoke. Her solicitude had been lost upon him. In a flash, he had gone back over their whole life together and found it nothing but an unprofitable nagging struggle. Ann had been like this all along—making a pretense at unselfish interest but never ceasing to plot for her own advantage. She had determined to change him from the Jew he was, from the Jew he meant to be till the day he died. What had he done this time? What did she have against him now? His questions had taken it for granted that this was by no means a new subject for their discussion. To-night she had simply reopened a quarrel that had been raging for months. She had grown bolder, more intolerant of him, because she was safe again in her own home, had got him just where she wanted him.

Ann, dismayed by the suddenness of his revolt, let her arm drop in a heavy weariness along her side. "George," she warned him, fighting weakly for time, "George—listen to me; please listen." To keep him from some impetuous dangerous threat—that was suddenly all she could hope for.

But he had plunged on in his blinded pain. "I know what's the matter with you. You had no right to marry me in the first place. You're not willing to take me as I am—oh, no! But you'll be damned sorry for it if you keep on interfering and going to people behind my back." Without knowledge of what he was doing, he had flung off the covers and jumped out of the bed. "You thought I didn't know what you were up to. You and your mother!" That he was shouting nonsense, he all at once realized. "Yes, you and your mother!" he repeated, in the dazed attempt to make it appear plausible by repetition. "I won't sleep in the same bed with you, Ann—not in the same bed, do you hear?"

His wild absurdity had brought back her strength in a rush. She sat up and switched on the night light. "Look here, George." She spoke with a quiet severity. "You've been a dear boy these last two days. I'm not going to let you spoil it." She had slipped off of bed straight and stern, she faced him. "You know as well as I do that there's not a word of truth in what you've said."

"Why can't you let go my own arm?" His anger was weakening to sulkiness. "The more you meddle, the worse I'll be."

She put her hands on his shoulders. "It's because you're so unhappy—working things out all by yourself—that I want to help," she told him. With anxious perplexity, her eyes tried to meet his.

He still would not look at her; but suddenly he had caught her up to his arms and hidden his head on her shoulder. For a long unstirring moment, he held her close. He was too desperately ashamed to let her see his face. Clinging to her, he effaced everything from his frightened consciousness but the sensation of her as a warm refuge of love and protection. Like the lap of a mother to a miserable child.

"Dont mind me, Ann—don't pay any attention to me when I'm ugly." That was his apology.

"We'll forget all about it, George," she comforted him. "Come back to bed now. We'll never let it happen again." But her eye stared, wide and strained, into the future. He was not likely to forget. The remembrance of to-night would stay in his mind; that it might become warped and distorted beyond recognition, she already feared.

They were battling against cruel odds, he and she against the insensate craving in him to be destroyed and to drag her with him to ruin.

CHAPTER XII

"There's no use talking—I'd like to cry. I could sit right down and make a fool of myself." Jessica, striding into the New York house with her husband, had shaken her head in compassionate sorrow. "Poor father!"

Morgenthal had been dead only two months; but already the big building in East Sixty-Ninth Street had become a sealed tomb. A week after the funeral, Jessica had left town with all her servants and opened the Long Island place. "As soon as the boys come back, we'll get married and get out," he had told Geoffrey; impatient to have the matter settled, she regarded it as a mere bit of legal rigmarole, as no more romantic than the probating of the will. Three days after George and Ann landed, she had called for them at the Carter home and picked Morton up at the Plaza; then a dash down to that damned City Hall, where Geoffrey was waiting for them, a few words with the Justice of the Peace and they were rushing to the steamer that was to take them to the West Indies. It was all over, thank God!

"We'll be back in a month," Jessica had told George. "I'll call you up as soon as we dock." The Long Island house was open—why didn't he and Ann move out there?

Ten minutes after she had returned to New York, she dialed the Long Island place on the telephone.

"Could you meet us at the town house to-morrow afternoon?" Ann had asked. "There's so much to be done—and George needs your advice."

"Of course—the poor boy! Any time you say," Jessica had warmly responded. "I suppose Morton's being sarcastic with him as usual?"

"Well—he's not always pleasant," Ann admitted. "Shall we call it three to-morrow?"

"All right," Jessica agreed. "And I'll stick by you and George."

Entering the New York house again, she had had the sensation that her father's body still lay there, that during all the weeks of her absence it had remained in dark solitary possession. The air was drenched with the sweating chill of a vault by human breath for years; it seemed to smell of death. Going to the dining-room door, Jessica pushed back the heavy draperies. All the blinds had been drawn upon. The dazzling sunshine of the winter afternoon soaked through them and paled the darkness. In the wan yellow-white dusk, the woodwork of the walls looked blurred and clouded; only the table kept something of its old subdued gleam. Suddenly, Jessica recalled the Wednesday night, just a few months ago, when she had stood on the threshold and gloatingly surveyed the brilliant scene.

She turned away, crossing to the library, she kept her eyes averted from the floor of the hall. Down the center of that long polished aisle and out of the grilled door, the coffin, covered by a blanket of yellow mimosa, had been carried.

"Come along, Geoffrey." Shouldering a vigorous way out of the visions that crowded around her, she beckoned to him imperiously and threw open the library door upon the mournful tableau of Ann and George and Morton huddled together at one end of a lit-

WOMEN'S LEAGUE

The Toronto Women's League of the United Synagogue of America held a Purim party on Sunday, March 1st, at McCaul Street Synagogue for the Jewish children of the various settlement houses. President, Mrs. L. M. Schwartz, welcomed the children and Rabbi S. Sachs related the story of Esther. A class under the leadership of Mr. Ogushewitz, of Brunswick Avenue Talmud Torah, sang Hebrew songs. Others taking part in the program were Clifton Pezim, Victor and Harold Hertzman. Refreshments. Purim dance for Jewish students of Toronto University and Osgoode Hall Saturday evening, March 7th., at Goel Tzedec Vestry Rooms. March 15th. Historical contest open to all Jewish boys and girls from the ages of 19 to 23, at Goel Tzedec Synagogue. Prospective contestants write or telephone to Mrs. M. Johnson, 404 Brunton Road, Hillcrest 4409; or Mrs. L. M. Schwartz, 33 Monroe Park Avenue, Howard 7049.

MEETING POSTPONED

An executive meeting of the Jewish Children's Home was held on Tuesday, February 24th., at the home of Mrs. H. Hutner, Spadina Road. Owing to Purim the regular meeting for March will be postponed.

tered table. The boys still had on their overcoats and hats. Ann, hunched down in her furs, had plunged her arms, up to the elbows, into a big muff. Her heels rested on the top ring of her chair and her knees were almost on a level with her chin.

"Hello!" She sprang to her feet and was immediately swept into the perfumed engulfing warmth of Jessica's embrace.

"Don't get up, George," Jessica, over Ann's shoulder, waved him back to his seat. He had started to rise and to spill all over the table the papers he had been collecting and sorting for the family conference. Jessica kissed him in a hearty tenderness and, laying a firm palm upon his precious documents, saved them from further dispersal.

"Bitter cold here," she commented, taking Morton into her arms and giving a sidelong attention to Geoffrey's stiff progress through the round of hand-shakes.

"Bitter!" Morton considered that the epithet was much too temperate. "It's perishing. I've got chilblains now. I'll probably have pneumonia tomorrow." The glance he gave George hinted that he rather hoped he would, that he was ready to serve as a test case if by so doing he could prove his brother's obstinate bullheadedness. "There's no reason in the world why we shouldn't have had a furnace fire."

"George and I thought a wood fire would keep us warm enough," Ann explained to Jessica.

George, looking up from the table, gave his wife a quick smile of gratitude. His eyes guiltily implored her not to be disappointed in him because he was letting her share the blame. After all, this was a critical day—the first meeting of the Morgenthal heirs; he needed her to back him up, to keep the opposition from being unanimous. Morton and the others mustn't know that she had been on their side in this, that she'd been asking him over and over, "George, don't you think we ought to send somebody to New York to start up a furnace fire?"

"Yesterday was like spring, you know," Ann continued.

"And to-day it's being mean," Morton was tart. "It's a wonder the electric fans aren't going."

"Oh, for heaven's sake stop grumbling about the furnace, Morton," George groaned. "We've got more important things to talk over."

"I consider my health the most important thing in the world," Morton informed him with blatant peevishness.

"Go along back to the hotel, then, and get into bed with a hot-water bottle," George advised him.

"Now, now," Jessica coaxed. "Do shut up, both of you boys." She nodded in the direction of the hearth, where a pile of damp logs smoldered and hissed. At that moment, a cloud of acrid smoke was puffed out into the room. "What more do you want?" Standing back of George now, an indulgent hand on his shoulder, she frowned threateningly at Morton. By her attitude, she made it clear that she was prepared to roll up the sleeves of her fur wrap and fight in defense of that miserable fire. "What more do you want?" she repeated her challenge.

Morton inclined his head to her in ironic politeness. "Why, nothing more," he surrendered. "It's the prettiest possible blaze." The argument had been of some value to him, his capitulation told her. She had thrown in her lot with George. Very well—he'd remember that.

"If you'd go to work with the power and vigor instead of just quarreling that fire would have been a good one." Jessica was willing to overlook [illegible] the situation might be improved. "Geoffrey, you did it up a bit, didn't you?"

"In a disinterested spirit, I should say that the builder of the fire had forgotten all about the chimney flue," Geoffrey commented at once.

"The chimney flue?" George was aghast. His vocabulary, it was obvious, did not contain the word.

"Good Lord, he forgot to open the flue!" Jessica cried. The bitterness and antagonisms of the little gathering collapsed at once. Even George grinned out a confession of disgusted amusement.

Under Geoffrey's deft manipulation, the logs had soon burst into crackling flame.

"A cigarette, everybody." Jessica opened her case and slid it across the table. When they had all lit up and got comfortably seated, she started the meeting with a characteristic informal pounce. "Now to business. Just how badly off are we? Just how stripped?"

"It's impossible to tell that yet," George answered. "Things are awfully involved, you see. It will take months, at least a year, I should think——"

"Well, my advice is this." Jessica, without waiting for the details, had made up her mind. "Dump everything into the market; sell all we've got—houses, furniture, automobiles. If we're going to be poor, we may as well begin to act like it." She threw off her extravagant sables as she spoke.

"Is my fire responsible for that gesture?" Geoffrey queried dryly. "Or do you want me to take those furs to the nearest pawn shop?"

George cleared his throat, as if in polite remonstrance against his brother-in-law's levity. "We're not going to be poor, you know," he protested to Jessica. "We'll be well off, all of us."

"Well off, yes," Jessica admitted. "But that's the same as being poor, for people like us."

"I shouldn't be surprised if we found there wasn't a cent left," Morton announced. "Really, I shouldn't. There's so much mystery, so much sand being thrown into people's eyes." He flashed George a smile of cruel benignity. "So many words of four syllables being thrown around when you ask for simple explanations."

"You are in a rotten mood, dear," Jessica informed him. Catching Ann's eye, she nodded at her, as if to say that she'd been going over last night's telephone conversation and was in whole-hearted agreement with that little remark about Mortons unpleasantness.

Ann's response took the form of a grave apologetic headshake. It was an eloquent gesture. She wasn't trying to foment trouble; though she was pledged to work with George, she could still see Morton's viewpoint. "Don't think I'm a mischief-maker," she silently implored Jessica. "I'll trust you." Jessica's expression promised.

Ann was worried, not for herself but for the Morgenthals. Sitting today in the great shut house, she had been unable to fight down a persistent tremor of uncertainty. In the few days she had spent here before her marriage, she had had the impression of basking in a warmth of air that colored and ripened whatever it touched. A rich shadow had filled the rooms, a dusk that glowed as from some deep inner light of its own. Everywhere glimmers of gold had trembled in the mysterious depths of polished surfaces. The whole place had possessed the charm of a full-bodied wine of ancient vintage in a cobwebbed bottle.

This afternoon, the change had struck upon Ann's consciousness with the force of a magician's handclap dispelling an illusion. The Morgenthal house still stood firm, of course; the big rooms still contained a fortune in rolled-up rugs and shrouded furniture, in paintings and faded tapestries. But it was no longer the Morgenthal home. The treasures in it had become dead uprooted things, just so many catalogued articles that waited for the hoisting of the auctioneer's gravel. Sounds rang out, hollow and brassy; before, they had been reduced to a padded softness, as if they had filtered through layer upon layer of the thickest muffling velvet. Jessica and George and Morton were strangers on the scene now. Ann, musing disconsolately over the fate of the house, could not help fearing that the blight would spread to all the other Morgenthal possessions. As far as she was concerned, it really did not matter how the estate turned out. She had been schooled in bitter frugalities. She had watched her parents eke out their limited funds to meet every demand of good living. In that struggle, her mother and father had trotted themselves to an anaemic ashen frailty. She herself had n times felt a numbing weariness steal upon her. The thought that the Morgenthals might one day suffer that ordeal saddened her. She hated to hear Jessica talk about being "stripped." It was all very well for her to stride into the discussion this afternoon with her gigantic projects of economy. Selling houses and automobiles, practicing thrift on a scale of heroic extravagance—that was Jessica's way out of the difficulty. Just a moment ago, smoking her Egyptian cigarette, lounging, sleepy and flushed and fragrant, in her chair, she had remarked: "It's time we all stopped spending money like a lot of drunken sailors."

"Where did you pick up that beautiful figure of speech, Jessica?" Morton had inquired and Geoffrey had promptly explained. "In Jamaica—the talk of the coolies is full of exotic imagines, you know." Geoffrey and Morton had begun to relish each other as an audience. They were already allies. Within a quarter of an hour, two opposing camps had formed: on the one side Morton and Clarke; on the other, Jessica and Ann and George.

"I mean it," Jessica had humorously insisted. "What we need is hard common sense. We've let father do the thinking all our lives. Now we've got to use our own brains. Isn't that so, Ann?"

Ann smiled assent. It seemed odd that she should be pitying Jessica and Morton to-day. Jessica, in her sables, looked an object of envy, not sympathetic concern; and this new game she was planning to play would undoubtedly appeal to her capacious nature. She would have a rowdy good time; cashing in all the personal property. She would get as much fun out of the sales as a gamester breaking the bank at some Casino on the Riviera. But if the estate was in a shaky condition, the creditors wouldn't allow her to keep more than a small fraction of the glittering store that would fill her lap. After the final settlement, she'd be "well off," as George had said. Ann knew the significance of that term; the Carters were well off. Jessica would find herself the mistress of an attractive apartment in a fashionable quarter of New York; she'd have three or four servants—at least three or four. But she would be the victim of a loud profane discouragement. Constantly her baffled glances would rove back into the old days when she had bossed a small army of dependents, when she had been able to work off her restlessness in houses of forty or fifty rooms.

Morton, too, the varnished and specialised product, was going to find it irksome to dirty his hands with counting money. Nor would he enjoy the task of calculating ways and means in his clever brain, that heretofore had busied itself only with smart trivialities: the thought of how good-looking he really was; the problem of the most becoming shades in neckties; the exercise of shaping and polishing epigrams; deliberations as to who were the best people within range, and reflections on the most skilful way to approach them. It cost Morton a great deal to keep his rare sheen. Touching only the surface of things, tapping and testing them with manicured fingernails to find out whether they rang musically to the civilized ear, the sterile decade yet ran up an expense account that almost matched his barbarous sister's. And of course, a boy as ambitious as Morton had to entertain his friends—entertain them with a discreteness that took twice the capital required by a more splashy hospitality. In his [illegible] position, he must be the g[illegible] and indulgent leader; in other [illegible] he needed a certain amount of [illegible] that he could give to worthy ca[illegible] classmates of his at Yale, for in[illegible] who came of fine old families and being dunned by their tailors. N[illegible] in the world had more delicately [illegible] table instincts than Morton in [illegible] emergencies. His list of the hu[illegible] neediest cases had been compiled [illegible] the "Social Register." He "tided [illegible] over"; landing safely on the [illegible] ite bank, they usually forgot [illegible] indebtedness to him. That did not [illegible] ter, so long as they continued t[illegible] him to their houses. If they [illegible] pointed him, however, by going [illegible] in midstream or by turning their [illegible] on him the moment they felt [illegible] ground safe under their feet. [illegible] Morton hardened into a [illegible] tect. He demanded the settlement [illegible] claims with interest. Despite the[illegible] casional returns, though, it was [illegible] man's hobby, relieving the distr[illegible] indigent aristocrats. Ann had h[illegible] from George, of Morton's gene[illegible] towards Yale students. "He's g[illegible] real sense of honor," the older b[illegible] had lamented; and Ann had a[illegible] that it did seem rather sordid. [illegible] she felt sorry for Morton and w[illegible] in her heart that he could go or[illegible] the rest of his life with his unse[illegible] tous benefactions.

After all, George would suffe[illegible] least from the financial decline. [illegible] more inconspicuous his way of [illegible] the more he would be out of the p[illegible] eye. The idea of a small establish[illegible] appealed to Ann. She took cou[illegible] from the thought of all the little [illegible] tentions she could give him in fu[illegible] Two servants would be enough [illegible] them in their snug domestic clo[illegible] They would not struggle, as her [illegible] ents had done, to act out every [illegible] ceremony of tradition. They would [illegible] informal unimportant people. [illegible] would be a quiet solitude, warm[illegible] through to the very core by open [illegible] blue with the smoke of their ciga[illegible] with curtains drawn down [illegible] world that had no interest in them.

"Now we've got the stage set," Mor[illegible] ton was addressing George; but [illegible] the corner of one eye he flashed [illegible] nal at Geoffrey, warned him to [illegible] sharp—he was going to say somet[illegible] clever. "May I ask what it's all [illegible] Mr. Belasco?"

"It's time we went over things," George announced, fluttering the pages of a morocco-bound volume on the table.

"Things?" Morton queried [illegible] ingly. Then, "Of course—I should have known. Things."

George's mouth tightened. "Be serious—let's cut out the jokes, Morton," he pleaded, with an expression on his face of chilled dignity.

"All right," Morton agreed. "I have to do something to keep warm while I'm waiting."

"I've got the inventory here." George scowled at the book in front of him. "I thought we'd better go over the house first of all and pick out what we'd like. I can check up on different articles." He took a pencil from his vest pocket—a brand-new pencil with a sharp point; after sharpening it up proudly for Morton's inspection, he opened the volume and, in the left-hand margin of a page, made an elaborate asterisk.

"Pick out what we'd like," Morton reflected aloud, seeming to balance himself like a tightrope walker on a problem.

"Mighty good idea, George," Jessica threw in a wholehearted endorsement.

"And that means, I suppose," Morton pursued, "that the executors are planning to sell this house and everything in it."

"Of course they're planning to sell," George told him, touching in the asterisk.
